Armed parties are leaving now from Pajarito, Atrisco and Beien, to recover the bodies of the killed, and to ascertain the whereabouts of the sheep, and if possible to recover them, or a part.

Information from Silver City states that Sheriff Whitehill and three men are prospecting on Copper Creek, and their fate is considered precarious, they being right in among the Indians. They are each willing to allow instructions for him if the second choice is in favor of their respective men.

The Tilden opposition to Thurman or to Jewett is all imaginary, and simply some by-play of the Bishop faction to divert attention and gain their man the second place. The indications point to no chaos, but a harmonious and brief convention.
